You are probably already familiar with traditional fantasy football leagues, as well as 2-QB, Keeper, dynasty leagues, auctions and DP formats. If you are, it means you're a Fantasy Football veteran who's ready to take on a new challenge! These alternative leagues should be secondary to your primary leagues. Just try to invite people who are as adventurous as you are, so you can get full enjoyment from these alternative Fantasy Leagues. I'm sure if you go on Twitter, you'll be able to find some Fantasy players ready to try something new – or try out the forums and bulletin boards of your regular league service page. These leagues meant making up for the importance of running back position and making the quarterback position to be shallower than you've used to. It's the only position that affects every other player on an NFL team, and they collect statistics specific to their position. We have to make them more important, but the depth in position makes it difficult. This is a great way to do it -- every Fantasy team runs two quarterback stacks every week. There are also some sites that specifically deal with 2-QB leagues. Some services, MyFantasyLeague.com, offer free draft-only leagues, where your team is made up only of players you assemble, and you are never able to customize your roster. It's fun to do in June and July when you're trying to kill time until your real league draft arrives. The MFL also offers leagues called MFL 10s, which accidentally won the FSTA award for best Fantasy draft contest on the web. For $10, you can win $100! It's fun to do with six or eight owners, don't do a full-blown draft, as you go deeper, it's less interesting. But really, the draft is the most fun part of these leagues. Have owners choose 1 QB, 2 RBs, 2 WRS, 1 TE, 1 K and 1 Defense. Scoring is the opposite of real Fanties, so you reward bad players. That means you give points for carries, but deduct points for yards and touchdowns. Low yards by handle RBs are the best. Reward these stats as well: Deductions for touchdowns or 300/100-yard gamesDropped passesFumblesInterceptionsIncompletns thrownLow yards by receptionMissed kicksFor defense: Points and Yardage allowed is a good thing. Find some of the services used by these leagues, where you can start any player in the NFL, but you can only use them in your lineup once for a season. There used to be a competition called fantasy tournament of champions, but I haven't seen that in a few years. Auction sketches are awesome... but also traditional designs! Why not do a five-round auction, where teams take turns nominating players until 60 players are nominated and then make a draft after that? The team with the most money left over from the auction gets to pick up first, and so on. Obviously this is considered the deepest possible leagues, which means owners with early picks get a much bigger advantage than the lower teams. Consider doing the serpentine of the first two rounds and then just making the order of the second round of the draft the order for each round after. Thus, teams with top picks eventually also get 64th, 96th, 128th and 160th in the first five rounds, as opposed to the first pick, 64th pick, 65th pick, 128th pick and 129th pick. Middle teams aren't affected, but the bottom teams get much better picks in odd rounds after round one. For Fantasy Baseball, we do two leagues out of 10 teams (AL and NL only), but we combine them in one mixed league. Then, as real baseball begins to interleague play, we interleague play among our teams (it's a head-to-head league). Then we also have a fantasy world series of three games between the best in both leagues! Also, there is this league, which I think is one of the most interesting Fantasy Football leagues ever created! Every week, instead of facing just one team, you face all 11 teams. So after week 1, you can be 11-0 or 0-11 or anything in between. It would really stop all the times when teams are having a great week, to eventually face the team with the most points that week. However, the playoffs would remain standard. Similar to the above lineup, each team plays only two teams each week, which again, would really help those who have big games but poor schedules. Who will win against Bayern in the Champions League final? After a hasty and utterly unusual end to this year's tournament due to the coronavirus pandemic, we received the final of the highest caliber. PSG's huge spending finally overcame years of disappointment to reach its first Champions League decider player. He was too strong for Borussia Dortmund, Atlanta and RB Leipzig in the knockout rounds and will love the chances of getting his hands on a trophy known as big ears. Bayern Munich were more than ruthless in their own knockout run, scoring party goals along the way. The aggregate 7-1 win over Chelsea was followed by an incredible 8-2 quarter-final win over Barcelona and a 3-0 triumph over Lyon.Most people are likely to support the experience of Robert Lewandowski and Bayern. But we don't mind the Cinderella story in world sport and while PSG spent crazy money, especially on Neymar ($264m) and Mbappe ($214m), he is an outsider here. And we think PSG could do the job in a high-scoring thriller. Image source: Kayo Sports website
